

SIKHI:

AN EDUCATORS GUIDE

THE SIKH COALITION

INTRODUCTION

There are more than 25 million Sikhs around the world, which makes Sikhi (also known as Sikhism) the fifth-largest organized world religion.

Yet the Sikh tradition remains largely unknown in the United States and is often absent from the K-12 education system. Where it has been present, Sikhi has often been represented inaccurately.

These problems have contributed to the serious challenges that many Sikh students and Sikhs at large experience today, including bullying and harassment, negative stereotypes, discriminatory policies, vandalism and violent hate crimes.

This guide aims to help facilitate learning about Sikhs and Sikhi in K-12 classrooms, provide educators and school administrators with information about issues faced by Sikh children in schools, as well as provide basic reference information about the Sikh tradition.

FAST FACTS

5TH LARGEST

Sikhi, also known as Sikhism, is the world's fifth-largest organized world religion.

The Sikh identity includes five articles of faith. The most visible aspects of the Sikh identity include unshorn hair and the turban.

Love, service, and justice are core Sikh values.

Guru Nanak, the founder of Sikhi, was born in 1469; the religion was formalized in 1699 after nine additional gurus.

There are 27 million Sikhs around the world; most live in Punjab, a region split between modern India and Pakistan.

There are roughly 750,000 Sikhs in the United States.

A Note for Educators:

WHY THIS GUIDE

Diversity education, cultural literacy, and religious literacy is critical in the K-12 education system. In their 2021 Position Statement titled The Study of Religion in the Social Studies Curriculum the National Council of Social Studies states that "The study of religion is a critical lens for understanding human existence in its broader cultural context, including its relation to economic, political, and social institutions, as well as the impact of religion on history, arts, geography, language, and literature. All students benefit from studying religion because of its pivotal position in both public and private life. Preparation for citizenship in a religiously pluralistic country and world requires the study of religion. A deep understanding of religions helps students to amplify diverse voices, combat intolerance, and create opportunities for community building. It prepares students to engage with people of diverse religious identities and belief systems with civility and respect."

Sikhi, or Sikhism, is the fifth-largest organized world religion and therefore must be included in state standards and curricula alongside other world religions. As of the time of writing, New Jersey, Texas, New York, California, Idaho, Tennessee, Colorado, Arizona, Oklahoma, Michigan, North Dakota, Nebraska, Indiana, Kansas, Utah, Mississippi, Virginia, Washington DC, Connecticut, Minnesota, and Alabama are states that have worked with the Sikh Coalition to specifically include Sikhism in their public schools via their state standards. Rhode Island, North Carolina, and Maryland have also included Sikhi in their accompanying documents and frameworks respectively.

We look forward to adding more states to this list in the months and years ahead. We hope that your state will consider being a willing and active partner with the Sikh Coalition as we continue advocating for the inclusion of Sikhi in State Standards, creating new learning materials and curricula about Sikhi, ensuring accurate and complete information on Sikhs in textbooks and providing support in cases of bullying and harassment against Sikhs in schools.

SHARED WITH EDUCATORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ACROSS THE COUNTRY, THIS GUIDE PROVIDES:

- Constitutionally appropriate ways to bring learning about Sikhs and Sikhi into classrooms.
- An overview of issues faced by Sikh children in schools and how to deal with them.
- Background and reference information on the Sikh community, faith, and tradition

SECTION 1

HOW TO BRING LEARNING ABOUT SIKHI INTO YOUR CLASSROOMS

Explore learning opportunities about Sikhs in order to deepen student experiences across the curricula, from Social Studies to World Geography, World History, United States History and World Religion courses.

Where can I get constitutionally appropriate and accurate resources to teach about Sikhi?

The Sikh Coalition can provide constitutionally appropriate K-12 curriculum materials and adaptable lesson plans for the teaching about Sikhi in the classroom.

You can request resources by emailing us or downloading them from our website:

Email:

education@sikhcoalition.org

Website:

www.sikhcoalition.org/educators

Our Resources for Educators Include:

Elementary:

- Children's books and discussion guides
- Short videos with supplementary learning materials
- Sikh Awareness Presentation (tailored for a young audience): Sikh students or parents from your school community that would like to share the Sikh tradition can use this presentation. You can also contact us if you would like a local community member to visit your school to give this presentation.
- Sikh Celebrations Guide
- C3: Elementary School Inquiry

Middle/ High School:

- Learning materials about Sikhi for Social Studies, U.S. History, World History, and World Religion classes (including state-specific materials for states that already include teaching about Sikhi in their standards)
- Reading lists
- Educational videos with supplementary learning materials
- Sikh Awareness Presentation (tailored for middle / high school audiences as well as for teachers): Sikh students or parents that would like to share about the Sikh tradition can use this presentation. (You can also contact us if you would like a local community member to visit your school to give this presentation.)
- 'Who Are the Sikhs?' posters for display: This poster is a great brief introduction to the Sikh community

Teacher Trainings

If you have a professional development day or diversity training coming up at your school, get in touch. The Sikh Coalition can offer teacher trainings. The format can be adapted depending on your needs, but can include a brief introduction to Sikhi and an exploration of our most relevant teaching resources for your staff.

This is worthwhile for educators and staff across disciplines, but particularly relevant for social studies teachers. We can be contacted at education@sikhcoalition.org to provide further details.

Be Creative!

HERE ARE SOME SUGGESTIONS TO GET YOU STARTED:

- Including some of our recommended books in your 'story time' sessions for children or in your school libraries for older children.
- Having a book club or poetry festival showcasing a range of authors or characters from diverse religious and cultural backgrounds.
- Do you have an opportunity to introduce the Sikh festival of Vaisakhi? In mid-April each year, many Sikh communities celebrate Vaisakhi. This is a great occasion to ask any Sikh students in your school to share their personal stories about what Vaisakhi means to them and how they celebrate it with their class.
- Having a cultural awareness event. Do you have students from many different cultures and communities at your school that wish to share their tradition? Ask a Sikh student to present on behalf of the Sikh community.
- Does your state celebrate Sikh Awareness Month? Several states recognize April as Sikh Awareness Month annually and California does this in November. We can help you bring Sikh awareness into your school or put you in touch with your local Sikh communities to find out more about events that may be happening near you during these months.

If you have an idea to raise Sikh awareness in your school, please be in touch and we can help!

SECTION 2

ISSUES FACED BY SIKH STUDENTS AND HOW TO DEAL WITH THEM

Introducing cultural literacy among students of all different backgrounds can reduce bullying and bridge understanding. In a 2024 study conducted by the Sikh Coalition, less inclusive schools result in higher rates of bullying.

The survey found that 78 percent of Sikh youth reported experiencing behavior defined as bullying, 1 in 10 young Sikhs reported being bullied by teachers or staff, and more violent physical bullying was reported by young Sikh men who wear turbans or patkas as articles of faith.

Sikh students also face high rates of microaggressions, but may not recognize these behaviors as bullying.

SELECT EXAMPLES OF BULLYING FACED BY SIKH CHILDREN:

- Being labelled “terrorist”(or a version thereof) or told to “go back to their country.”
- Being referred to as an ethnic food, object, or place in a derogatory manner.
- Being teased about their or their family’s English proficiency and/or accent.
- Being repeatedly referred to by a derogatory “nickname” instead of their real name.
- Being physically attacked.
- Recieving death threats
- Being harassed on social media.
- Girls with long hair having their hair pulled.
- Boys being referred to as girls because of their long hair.
- Having their hair forcibly cut (or threat thereof) by other children.
- Being made fun of for their turbans or patkas (smaller head covering for younger children) or having these articles of faith pulled on or forcibly removed.
- Having the topknot under their turban or patka being pulled or used as a target for thrown items.
- Being excluded from social activities and friendship groups.
- Name-calling or derogatory comments about ancestry, citizenship status, or other related topics from school administrators, teachers, or staff.

If you have Sikh students in your school or school district and would like to discuss anti-bullying measures or opportunities for education, please contact the Sikh Coalition at education@sikhcoalition.org.

Recommendations for Teachers and School Administrators:

- Teachers and administrators should involve students and parents directly in bullying prevention efforts.
- Administrators should collect data on school bullying and harassment in order to understand where, when, and how students experience bullying and harassment, and ascertain whether adults respond to reported incidents.
- Administrators and teachers should implement bullying assessment and prevention measures and policies during early school years rather than waiting until middle or high school to do so.

- All school staff should be trained on school bullying and harassment prohibitions.
- School staff should take steps to create policies that prohibit cyber bullying.
- Ensure bullying and harassment does not occur on the school bus.
- Recognize that for some students and parents, English is not their first language. Therefore, language and other culturally sensitive issues can sometimes be a barrier to approaching teachers with problems they may be having.
- Teachers should share presentations, lesson plans, books, and videos on Sikhs with students.
- Where possible, the support of administrators and teachers for the inclusion of Sikhi in state standards is invaluable.

These and other recommendations, as well as the full report on the National Sikh school climate survey, “Where Are You Really From?” can be found at thesikh.co/wayrf

School Uniform and Sports Policies

Sikh students who choose to wear their articles of faith, including the uncut hair and turban or patka, are at times told that their articles of faith do not align with school or sports uniform policies. Please note that public schools have a legal obligation to provide religious accommodation for these articles of faith.

Denying a Sikh student the right to wear their turban or other articles of faith in school or during school-sponsored activities denies the student their rights under the First Amendment to freely exercise their religion. Accommodations must be made, and parents, as well as the student, should be involved in those discussions.

Sikh students have played sports while wearing their articles of faith in the United States, including for NCAA Division Schools and other local youth sporting organizations. In addition, international sports associations like the International Basketball Federation and the International Boxing Association have made amendments and accommodations to their policies to allow for religious articles of faith. Thus, Sikh student athletes should be provided with religious accommodations to allow for participation while wearing their articles of faith.

If you have Sikh students in your school or school district and you require further advice about any type of uniform accommodations that are requested (for example during sports), or if you would like a presentation about the Sikh articles of faith, please contact Sikh Coalition at education@sikhcoalition.org.

SECTION 3

BACKGROUND ON SIKHISM FOR EDUCATORS

Demographics

The vast majority of the world's 27 million Sikhs live in the Indian state of Punjab. There is also a robust and flourishing diaspora, much of it concentrated in the Commonwealth due to migration within the British Empire. But Sikhs can be found in communities all over the globe.

The Sikh population remains concentrated in South Asia, with about 22 million adherents in India and 20,000 in Pakistan. Estimates suggest that the next largest Sikh communities around the world are in Canada (650,000), the U.S. (750,000) and the U.K. (450,000), with smaller numbers in Southeast Asia (175,000), and East Africa (50,000 to 100,000).

Within North America, the largest communities are concentrated on the two coasts, with the biggest populations in California, New York, and New Jersey in the United States, and Vancouver and Ontario in Canada.

There are more than 350 Sikh places of worship (gurdwaras) in the United States, the first of which was founded in 1912 in Stockton, California. Credible estimates on the number of Sikhs in the United States range from about 300,000 to 1 million. 750,000 remains the most reasonable estimate.

Sikh History

About 500 years ago, a boy named Nanak was born in the Punjab region of South Asia. The town of his birth, Talvandi, which has since been renamed Nankana Sahib, falls within modern-day Pakistan. The predominant religions in Punjab at that time were Islam and Hinduism, and Nanak's parents were Hindu by background. However, young Nanak was disenchanted by the social inequalities and religious practices he observed in the world around him and decided to establish a new religious tradition, which would come to be known in the Punjabi language as Sikhi (and later, in English, as Sikhism).

Guru Nanak spent the majority of his life sharing his message of love, oneness, service, and spirituality. He also cultivated a community and instituted many of the hallmarks that distinguish independent religions. He began composing his own devotional poetry, which Sikhs consider as revelatory, and his writings serve as the foundation of the Sikh scriptural text. He established community centers for gathering, learning, and worship, and he also instituted a common discipline that all his followers were expected to practice.

Each of these features, among others, demonstrates Guru Nanak's intention to establish Sikhi as a unique and independent religious tradition.

Sikhi maintains its own prophets, known as gurus, a term of reverence that literally means "enlightener." There were 10 gurus in total, the last of whom, Guru Gobind Singh, died in 1708. It was at this point that authority of the Sikh community – the guruship – was passed to two entities for eternity: the community of initiated Sikhs (Guru Khalsa Panth) and the scripture (Guru Granth Sahib).

The Sikh community endured immense persecution in the early 1700s, but by the end of the century various Sikh groups (misals) accrued political power. This power was consolidated under the leadership of Maharaja Ranjit Singh, a widely respected ruler committed to fairness and justice. Punjab was the last region to be annexed by the British, and Sikhs began migrating to various Commonwealth nations during the colonial period. At the same time, the Sikh community was particularly active in the movement seeking freedom from colonial rule, and much of the initial organizing began among Sikhs living on the West Coast of the United States and Canada.

Sikhs in America

While most Sikhs today live in the Indian state of Punjab, there is also a robust and flourishing diaspora, with communities large and small all over the globe. Much of the diaspora is concentrated in the Commonwealth due to migration within the British empire, yet Sikhs continue to establish themselves in various countries throughout the world.

From the time of their arrival in the late 1800s, Sikh men and women have been making notable contributions to American society. Early immigrants settled in the Western frontier, where they played a major role in building America's railroads. Sikh Americans Bhagat Singh Thind, a Sikh immigrant and U.S. Army veteran whose landmark Supreme Court ruling in 1923 shed light on attacks on civil liberties and immigration policies in the early 20th century, and the first Asian-American congressman, Dalip Singh Saund, was a Sikh elected to office in 1957.

Sikh women and men continue to make diverse contributions to society. The inventor of fiber optics was a Sikh American, as is the largest peach grower in the United States. Sikhs help make up the backbone of America as farmers, drivers, engineers, and construction workers.

Sikh Americans serve in all walks of life, from teachers and pilots to musicians and doctors, and from civil servants and social activists to philanthropists and movie actors.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

How do you pronounce “Sikh”?

The word Sikh derives from the Sanskrit ‘shishya,’ which means ‘student.’

In its original Punjabi, the word is pronounced with a short “i” and an aspirated “k” – similar to the word “sick” in modern English. When European colonialists entered South Asia, they elongated the short “i” to make the word sound more like “seek.” While both pronunciations are used in modern English, the pronunciation from the original Punjabi is preferable.

How do Sikh last names work?

It is common in various geographical contexts for people to adopt surnames that reflect their social status. In South Asia, surnames often indicated one’s caste identity. The Sikh gurus rejected social discrimination of any kind and called on all Sikhs to drop their caste names and to adopt a collective last name.

Women take the last name “Kaur,” and men use the name “Singh.” Both of these names draw from traditional names used by royalty in South Asia.

Assigning royal last names continues to empower members of the community, highlight the belief in equality, gesture to the core belief of human sovereignty, and underscore the perceived familyhood of the collective Sikh community.

Many Sikhs today adopt Kaur or Singh as a middle name, while keeping a different last name.

Kaur translates to “Warrior Princess” while Singh translates to “Lion”.

Is Sikhi an independent religion?

One of the most common misconceptions about Sikhi is that it is a syncretic religion that essentially blends ideas from Islam and Hinduism. Rather, Sikhi is an independent tradition that maintains unique aspects for all the basic components of a world religion.

For instance, Sikhi maintains its own founder, prophets, scriptures, revelation, ceremonies, theology, practices, discipline, and places of worship. In short, Sikhi is and should be acknowledged as an independent religious tradition.

The Khanda is a Sikh emblem represents the oneness of God.

A High School senior meditates on the weekend at the Sikh Temple of Iowa.

The Sikh worldview centers on the idea of oneness. Sikhs believe that people of all faiths worship one divine being (Waheguru) who created this world and lives with-in it. The notion of divine presence leads to the belief that Waheguru is equally present in all people and that, therefore, every human being is equal in the eyes of the divine. From the Sikh perspective, there are no theological grounds to discriminate against people on the basis of their social identities – gender, caste, ethnicity, or any other identity. All positions of leadership and authority in Sikh religious and political life are open to people of all backgrounds.

Sikhs aim to recognize the divine presence in all aspects of life, and this constant remembrance contributes to the cultivation of a loving spirit and ethic. In Sikhi, finding love within our own lives is both the end and the means; realizing divine love is the ultimate goal, and practicing love with intention and spirit is the process for achieving that goal. In this sense, the complementary aspects of oneness and love are core theological precepts of the Sikh tradition.

A natural corollary of recognizing the oneness of the world and practicing love is to serve the world around you. In the Sikh tradition, service is a way of expressing gratitude to the divine. Service is prayerful action. The concept of love-inspired service is called seva, and it is a core part of the Sikh tradition.

All Sikhs are expected to serve humanity while also cultivating their own spirituality. The tradition calls on every Sikh to live as a sant-sipahi, a saint-soldier, who is committed to spiritual practice and to establishing a more just and equitable world. The core beliefs outlined above help us understand the three daily principles of Sikhi: truthful living, service to humanity, and devotion to the divine.

THE SCRIPTURE

The Sikh scripture is referred to as the Guru Granth Sahib and shares ultimate authority within the Sikh tradition. The text was compiled by the gurus themselves and consists of their devotional music and poetry. The gurus also incorporated writings from other spiritually elevated figures who lived in South Asia and shared the same worldview. The themes of the scriptural writings have largely to do with the nature of divine experience and the steps one can take to achieve it.

The entirety of the text is written in verse poetry, and a vast majority of it is set to music. Sikhs consider the Guru Granth Sahib to be a revealed text, and it plays a central role in Sikh devotional and ceremonial life. The scripture is the centerpiece of Sikh worship spaces. The gurdwara is modeled after imperial courts in early modern South Asia, and replicating this design helps remind Sikh worshippers of the Guru's sovereign and authoritative status. For instance, the Guru Granth Sahib is placed on a throne, a volunteer attends to it, and devotees bow before it to demonstrate their submission.

All Sikh life ceremonies incorporate the scripture in some way as well. For example, at a Sikh wedding, the bride and groom walk around the Guru Granth Sahib multiple times in order to, among other things, illustrate symbolically the centrality of the teachings within their own lives. The inclusion of writings by spiritual figures of other religious backgrounds speaks to the pluralistic nature of Sikhi; it reflects the belief that Sikhi is not the only path to realize divine love. Similarly, that the scripture is written in multiple languages (albeit in one script – Gurmukhi) suggests that the gurus did not believe this document to be the exclusive claim of people in a particular region. Rather, they believed their message to be a universal one that transcends linguistic and geographic boundaries.

THE INITIATED COMMUNITY: GURU KHALSA PANTH

Each of the 10 Sikh gurus worked to nurture the Sikh community, and over time, the community underwent its own growth of responsibility. It went from bearing a small amount of influence during the time of Guru Nanak to being consulted by the Sikh gurus in major decision-making moments. The community's influence culminated in 1699 A.D., when Guru Gobind Singh, the 10th Sikh guru, called on all Sikhs to gather in the city of Anandpur on Vaisakhi, the day that traditionally marked the celebration of the harvest festival in Punjab.

It was on this occasion that the community of initiates was formally institutionalized and given authority. This community, which would come to be known as Guru Khalsa Panth, provided an official structure for those individuals committed to the Sikh way of life. One demonstrates this commitment by accepting initiation (amrit) and adopting a few of the basic practices as articulated in the Sikh code of conduct (Rahit Maryada). The prescriptions in this document call on initiated Sikhs to, among other things, engage in daily prayers and wear five articles of faith.

It was during the occasion of Vaisakhi that Guru Gobind Singh asked the Sikh community members to abandon their last names that indicate their caste and social status and to adopt shared last names that signify equality and royalty. Sikh women were granted the last name "Kaur," and Sikh men were given the last name "Singh." Both of these names drew from common royal last names in South Asia. The practice of sharing last names unctions to cultivate a sense of collective familyhood, to erase inequalities on the basis of caste, and to send a message of empowerment that all people are equally divine and sovereign.

Given the historical significance of Vaisakhi, Sikh communities around the world continue to mark the occasion every year through gatherings, prayers and collective celebrations.

IDENTITY

Since the formative moments of the tradition, Sikhs have maintained a physical identity that makes them stand out in public, even in the context of South Asia. This identity includes five articles of faith.

These five articles of faith distinguishes any woman or man who has formally committed to the values of the Sikh religion by accepting initiation. While the turban (dastar) is not technically one of the five articles of faith, Sikhs have continued this practice for several centuries now – dating back to the times of the Sikh gurus – and it remains one of the most visibly distinctive features of Sikh practice. Both men and women are equally welcome to wear turbans, though it is true that more men do so than women.

KIRPAN

KESH

As with other religious communities, practitioners interpret, express, and relate to their traditions in various ways. There are many Sikhs who do not wear all five articles of faith, and, perhaps most notably, not all Sikhs maintain unshorn hair and turbans.

This does not make these individuals any less Sikh, nor does it disqualify believers from calling themselves Sikhs. Specifically, the five articles of faith are required for those who have accepted formal initiation.

Perhaps the most visible aspect of the Sikh identity is the turban, which can be worn by men and women alike.

Sikhs are also free to choose from various styles, colors, and patterns based on their personal preference.

The turban was historically worn by royalty in South Asia, and the gurus adopted this practice as a way of asserting the sovereignty and equality of all people.

For a Sikh, wearing a turban asserts a public commitment to maintaining the values and ethics of the tradition, including service, compassion and honesty.

There have been several court cases in the U.S. regarding the Sikh right to wear the kirpan, the article of faith that resembles a short, sheathed sword.

These cases have largely centered on whether the wearing of kirpans violates anti-weapons statutes or policies.

Most of these court cases have been decided in favor of the respective Sikh's right to wear the kirpan.

Sikhs' right to wear kirpans in public, at work, in public schools and in federal facilities is largely protected by the First Amendment and religious -rights laws.

There are contexts where kirpans have been barred, largely due to misunderstanding, yet the community continues to make strides in securing the right to wear this article of faith.

WORSHIP & THE GURDWARA

The gurdwara is the Sikh place of community learning, worship and gathering. The tradition of establishing such centers dates back to the time of Sikhi's foundation; Guru Nanak himself established community centers, which during his time were referred to as dharamsalas. From the time of Guru Nanak, visitors of all backgrounds have been welcomed in these spaces, and, to this day, people come to the gurdwara seeking shelter, comfort, and food.

The design and layout of the gurdwara mirrors that of imperial courts in early modern South Asia. Incorporating royal symbolism and language in a Sikh religious setting is a means of asserting sovereignty. The primary form of worship in the gurdwara context is collectively singing musical compositions from the scriptural text.

The direct translation of the term gurdwara – gateway to the guru– reflects the central role that the guru plays in this setting.

All people have the opportunity to lead worship, no matter their background (age, gender, caste, etc.). Sikhi does not maintain an ordained clergy – all people have equal access to the divine – so any woman or man from the congregation may lead religious services. In many gurdwaras, trained musicians lead the worship program, though it would be inappropriate to equate them with or describe them as priests.

Visitors should dress comfortably yet conservatively, opting for pants while avoiding shorts and skirts if possible. All people remove their shoes and cover their heads before entering as a sign of respect.

Upon walking in, devotees approach the Guru Granth Sahib, which is placed on a throne at the center, and bow before it as a sign of submission.

All people sit together on the floor as a sign of equality, and visitors should be careful not to point their feet at the scripture or turn their back toward it.

At the end of the worship service, congregants break bread together through the institution of langar, a free community meal open to all. The Sikh langar has long been patronized by people of various backgrounds seeking food.

Today, Sikhs have taken langar outside the gurdwara and into communities in need, from underserved populations in the United States to various refugee camps around the world.

Although the Sikh religion is not intrinsically tied to a single region or ethnicity, its homeland is the region of Punjab, and the vast majority of Sikhs in the world today are of Punjabi descent. The language of this region, Punjabi, is part of the Indo-European language family and remains one of the 10 most commonly spoken languages in the world.

Punjab has long served as the passageway between South Asia and Central Asia, and it therefore has been a meeting point for diverse cultures, religions, and peoples. It is also historically a fertile ground for agriculture. The region's name derives from a Persian compound, meaning "five waters" or "five rivers." For the past few centuries, those praising Punjab's agricultural contributions have fondly referred to it as the breadbasket of South Asia.

In the closing moments of British colonialism in the 20th century, Punjab was divided into two major countries along the lines of religious identity. Western Punjab became part of modern Pakistan, and Eastern Punjab became part of the new nation of India. This division, known as "Partition," resulted in one of the largest mass migrations and worst humanitarian crises in modern human history.

The relationship between the Indian state and the Sikh community has remained contentious since the creation of India in 1947.

In addition to being further truncated over the 20th century, the Indian government has denied Punjab basic rights and privileges afforded to other states, such as official language status and access to its own river waters for agricultural use.

Tensions between the Sikh community and the Indian state peaked in the last quarter of the 20th century. In June of 1984, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi ordered the Indian army to attack the Darbar Sahib (Golden Temple) of Amritsar, the most significant religious site in the Sikh tradition.

This assault, known as Operation Blue Star, not only resulted in the deaths of thousands of civilians and the damage of historic Sikh sites and artifacts; it also served as an attack on the Sikh psyche. In response to her attack on Darbar Sahib of Amritsar, two of Gandhi's Sikh bodyguards assassinated her later that year in the Indian capital of New Delhi. Her assassination led to Sikh genocide around the country – in which the government was complicit – that claimed thousands of civilian lives.

To this date, no court has held accountable perpetrators of anti-Sikh violence in 1984. The decade that followed was a particularly dark period in Punjabi and Sikh history.

Researchers have documented and are still uncovering more evidence on the extrajudicial violence that claimed the lives of tens of thousands of Sikh civilians in the 1980s and 1990s.

The Sikh tradition is to celebrate all major life moments in the presence of the guru. The first major ceremony follows the birth of a child. A reading is taken at random from the Guru Granth Sahib, and typically, the first letter of the first word is used for the first letter of the child's name.

The ceremony of Charni Lagna takes place when a child learns the Gurmukhi script proficiently and reads publicly from the Sikh scripture for the first time. A similar ceremony known as the Dastar Bandi occurs when a child publicly commits to wearing the Sikh turban.

The wedding ceremony is called Anand Karaj (ceremony of bliss) and takes place in the gurdwara as well. The bride and groom stand before the Guru Granth Sahib as community members recite and sing from a four-stanza composition known as Laavan.

The couple walks around the scripture with each of the four stanzas, a physical action that represents a new marital journey for which the Sikh scripture remains at the center.

The final ceremony, Antim Sanskar, takes place at one's death.

At this point, the community gathers to pray, worship, and celebrate the life of the individual who has passed. Sikhs typically cremate their dead rather than burying them.

Certain dates have special significance for the Sikh community. As with many religious traditions, Sikhi maintains its own calendar system, called the Nanakshahi calendar. And, as with many religious calendars, the Nanakshahi calendar begins with the birth of its founder, Guru Nanak, in 1469 A.D.

Gurpurab

The term gurpurab simply refers to the celebration of a date that is related to the lives of the Sikh gurus (e.g., birth, death, martyrdom). In the Sikh tradition, the most prominently celebrated gurpurabs are those connected with the birthdates of the founder, Guru Nanak, and the 10th guru, Guru Gobind Singh, as well as the martyrdom anniversaries of Guru Arjan (d. 1606 A.D.) and Guru Tegh Bahadur (d. 1675 A.D.). On these occasions, Sikhs around the globe gather to reflect on the lives and teachings of the guru.

Bandi Chhor Divas

The celebration of Bandi Chhor Divas comes around the same time as the Hindu festival of Diwali. On this day, Sikhs celebrate the return of their sixth guru, Guru Hargobind, who had been imprisoned by nearby rulers. In addition to his own release, Guru Hargobind successfully secured freedom for dozens of others who were also unjustly imprisoned. On this day, which falls in either October or November depending on the year, Sikhs gather to reflect on the values of freedom, justice, and standing up against oppression.

Vaisakhi

Vaisakhi is the most significant of the annual Sikh gatherings. Historically, this occasion marking the spring harvest in Punjab was celebrated with an immense festival. In 1699, Vaisakhi came to serve a particularly Sikh purpose when Guru Gobind Singh gathered the Sikh community and formalized the Guru Khalsa Panth. Every year in April, Sikhs gather in their local communities on Vaisakhi to remember history, celebrate collectively, and recommit to their religious traditions.

Hola Mohalla

While Holi serves as a festival of colors across South Asia, the city of Anandpur Sahib is colored with displays of physical fitness and martial arts. The tradition of Hola Mohalla dates back to the times of the gurus and served as an occasion for Sikhs to share the physical side of their saint-soldier practice. Today, communities that are unable to join the festivities in Anandpur Sahib mark Hola Mohalla with displays in their own local contexts. This festival takes place in March.
